ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank the members of my thesis committee, as well as my principle instructor, Marc Satterwhite, for their numerous insights and guidance during the creation of this thesis.

I would also like to thank my family and friends for their support and encouragement throughout this process.

Lastly, I would like to thank all the composers who have inspired me throughout the years, too numerous to list here. This piece would likely not exist without you.

PROGRAM NOTE

For this piece, I took a somewhat different approach towards conceptualization. Rather than have an overall arc in mind or an idea of various “events” that would occur throughout, I instead decided to start at the beginning, with a simple melody in the flute, and see where that would lead me. The rest of the piece flows organically from this one theme, as new ideas and melodies are constantly spun out and introduced until the piece at last reaches its apocalyptic climax.

I titled the piece To Awaken a God partly in reference to this climax, as well as to the musical processes that led me to arrive at it. Gods are portrayed in myriad cultures and mythologies, and they are invariably beings of immense power, and often better left undisturbed. What would happen, then, if someone decided to wake one up? My answer lies in the music, and the raw power of the final bars.

PERFORMANCE NOTES

Accidentals behave traditionally, carrying to the end of the measure. Courtesy accidentals are used throughout.

n = niente.

There are several incidents of double-bass notes below low E. If there is at least one player with a C attachment, the players without should simply not play during those sections, instead of taking it up an octave. The exception to this occurs in the last five measures, where everyone should play.

Harp chords should be played in the traditional manner, i.e. slightly rolled according to the harpist’s discretion and musicality. The only exception are chords that arise solely from octave doublings, which should never be rolled. There are also a few chords marked with brackets to indicate that the notes should be plucked simultaneously. In addition, some chords are marked with the roll symbol, which should be rolled more slowly. In all cases of rolled chords, the top note should land on the downbeat.

Dotted lines in the timpani indicate a retuning on the same drum. They are not glissandi.
